

SEL and Racial Equity Media Study

A journey of exploration, learning, and continued commitment to anti-racism

Our SEL and Racial Equity Media Study is an 8-part series dedicated to deepening participants' understanding of racial equity on an interpersonal, cultural, and systemic level. Tailored to the needs, interests and challenges of participants, this course is an intimate growth space where learners can receive support catered to their journey as a group and as individuals. While true SEL must be antiracist and equitable, too often resources have been developed through a single, limited lens. Refracting that perspective – re-defining our understanding of social emotional learning as anti-racist (and anti all systems of oppression), open-hearted, and curious – is a critical step in transforming learning spaces for all children and youth. This series will push participants to understand the prevalence and aggression of racism, white supremacy, and systemic oppression within our society, education systems and non-profit structures.

Pulling from a variety of media (articles, videos, and podcasts), this learner-driven series will feature guided discussion from Children's Institute staff.
