Children’s Institute congratulates Deborah Johnson, Director of National Services, on being a finalist for the 2015 Rochester ATHENA Award.

Debbie’s accomplishments are too numerous to mention, but we have highlighted a few of her career achievements:

- Debbie is part of the leadership team within Children’s Institute and oversees the management of Primary Project, a social-emotional program developed in Rochester in 1957, which is now found in over 1,000 schools throughout the United States and Canada.
- In her role as Director of Community Services (1993-2005) and current role as Director of National Services (2005-present), Debbie has been a key participant in Children’s Institute strategic planning and has used data from outside agencies as well as internal feedback to help chart a stable plan for the future growth of Children’s Institute.
- The National Association of School Psychologists (NASP) 2014 Presidential Award has been awarded to Debbie in recognition of her collaboration, advocacy, and leadership on behalf of NASP. She has received the Presidential Award four previous times, including 1995, 1996, 2002, and 2013.
- Debbie’s faith has taken her toward a new career path with an eventual goal of becoming an ordained minister in a Lutheran church. She has added the role of student, as seminarian, to her many other commitments at Children’s Institute, with more demands being placed on her leadership skills and experience as the organization expands.

Children’s Institute would like to also recognize another of this year’s nominees, Susan Acker, First Vice President at Merrill Lynch and a former board member at Children’s Institute. Special congratulations go out to this year’s ATHENA Award recipient, Amy Tait, Chairman, CEO and president of Brookstone Real Estate. All the nominees are outstanding role models for professionals in our community.
A Note from the Director

“One of the biggest assets that Children’s Institute has is the people who work here and our success is driven by the talent and passion of each and every staff and board member. This issue focuses on the people who are vital to the work of Children’s Institute. Every day, they demonstrate they care about changing the course of children’s lives and want to give them the best possible chance to succeed.

In many non-profits, it is difficult to keep talented staff for an extended length of time. Here at Children’s Institute, we have people who have been with us for many years and are known in the community for the dedication they bring to their work. There have been challenging times for Children’s Institute in the past, but we are now entering a period of renewed vision and potential growth. The staff and board tackles each challenge with a shared purpose to positively impact the social and emotional health of one million children by 2020, which is our new vision statement.

In addition to the current staff and board, Children’s Institute has been fortunate to have had many talented, professional people share their expertise and passion throughout our history and we have built on their successes. I thank them for their service as well as their continued interest in our progress.

Children’s Institute is also involved in many community initiatives that are working to improve the lives of children, including ROC the Future and Mayor Warren’s 3 by 3 Initiative. Each member of these groups brings years of experience as well as an extensive knowledge of poverty in Rochester and its effect on young children.

It takes the right people to make a change. I believe that Children’s Institute is well-positioned to be a force in this community and beyond because of the commitment, passion, and talent we have in our staff, board, volunteers, and supporters. Thank you.

—A. DIRK HIGHTOWER, PH.D.
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

“Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world; indeed, it’s the only thing that ever has.”

Children’s Institute staff support community voluntarism

Children’s Institute has been a valuable resource in Rochester for over fifty years as we’ve focused on improving the lives of children, families, and communities. Our employees believe in the spirit of voluntarism and help support a variety of programs throughout the area. Following are a few of the ways that Children’s Institute staff are positively impacting other organizations and people in our community.

Kim Avery (Early Care and Education Specialist) teaches a weekly religion class for kindergarteners at St. Rita’s in Webster as well as volunteering as the Community Events and Webelos Coordinator for Boy Scout Troop 108 in Webster. As the Community Events Coordinator, she coordinates volunteer opportunities for the boys to earn service hours as well as supporting the community’s areas of need.

“My son, Ian, has been in scouting since he was in first grade and plans on becoming an Eagle Scout.”

Arlene Bobin (Senior Project Coordinator) volunteers once a month at the Blessed Sacrament Soup Kitchen. She helps serve people in need who come for a hot meal. Arlene also volunteers as a driver for the Greece Food Shelf. Three or four times a year, she picks up food to distribute to three families during the month. Arlene is involved with both programs because, “I like to feed people.” Arlene is also an usher for Geva’s Mainstage and Nextstage performances and loves to see the wonderful plays that are held there.

Teale Fox (COMET Product Manager) chairs the Planned Parenthood young professionals committee called ‘REAL’ (Rising Educators, Ambassadors, and Leaders). Charged with engaging the next generation of Planned Parenthood supporters, the committee does a mix of outreach, advocacy, education, and fundraising. Most of the work focuses around sexual health education and increased access and awareness about Planned Parenthood services. Teale got involved because it’s a topic she’s passionate about: “I think access and education around sexual health empowers young people, and specifically young women, to be able to make informed choices. I also think, in Rochester, where we struggle with combating poverty, an organization that provides health services to all demographics is important.”

Cindy Harper (Senior Development Manager) volunteers with Rochester City School #54 in the Lyell-Otis neighborhood. She helps support a sixth grade girl’s group called the “Blossoms” which teaches them about empowerment, manners, and envisioning their futures. Cindy and her 15-year-old daughter Laney collected various toiletry items so that each girl will have a “be prepared” bag, donate items to recognize positive behaviors, and help celebrate birthdays with the girls. They also help with a food backpack program for students at that school, in conjunction with the First Presbyterian Church in Pittsford, who fills 50 backpacks per week for students who face food insecurity on weekends.

“I want to see these girls imagine a world where they can be successful in high school, college, and beyond – even with the challenges of poverty all around them.”

Terry Hartmann (Director of Finance and Operations) has been a Trustee, Treasurer, and Finance Committee Chair at Geva Theatre Center for the past six years. He became involved with Geva because, “A good friend asked me to and I felt I could help. Since then I’ve helped a bit, but have gained so much more – learning about theater (not a subject usually taught in engineering and business courses) and meeting so many wonderful people.”

For over 20 years, Terry has also been a member of the Rochester Chapter of Financial Executives International as a past president and current board member. He has also supported his wife Eileen’s volunteer efforts for many years, including National Women’s Hall of Fame, American Association of University Women, and Fairport Dollars for Scholars.

Lynn Smith (Social Worker) volunteers at Byron-Bergen Elementary School. “My son, Kyle, is a kindergarten student and this is a way for me to be involved for lots of reasons – most importantly to get a feel of what his day is like, the learning that takes place, and how I can piggy back at home what he does at school. I’m also able to get to know his teacher and his friends at school.”

At various times, Lynn is able to help out in his classroom both for instruction time and/or fun activities like celebrations. She is also part of the school’s STEP Boosters (parent organization) that offers events for families and elementary school students. In addition, Lynn is a horse lover and member of the Western NY Appaloosa Association that presents an annual horse show for the community.

Mary Jo Strassell (Grants Support Assistant) volunteers at a local hospice where she is called a friendly visitor; she visits patients in homes, hospitals, and out-patient settings. Depending on the need, volunteers might do any of the following activities: prepare meals, read stories, wheel patients to flower gardens, or just sit quietly with a person. Mary Jo shared that, “Really, it’s just about showing up for someone and being fully present with them in their time of need.”

Save the Date:

September 26 & 27, 2015

Children’s Institute is rolling out a new fundraiser – “Kids and Trucks!” Plan to bring your kids and experience up to fifty different trucks – a unique opportunity to climb on trucks and explore. Children’s Institute is thrilled to carry on this event, which was originally presented by the Western New York chapter of the American Liver Foundation for many years. A special thank you goes to Nancy Koris, Past Executive Director of the Western New York chapter. She began this fundraiser many years ago and now turns it over to us, ensuring that this family-friendly event will continue to be offered to children all over Rochester! Please visit our website for event information and online ticket purchasing.
Dan Draper named as a finalist for 2015 ESL Jefferson Award

In response to his nomination and selection as a finalist, Dan shared that, “I am very thankful that the focus of much of my time this past 5 years has been with Children’s Institute. Providing input, perspective, and advice is only gratifying when it gets used. For Children’s Institute, this means delivering more and better evidenced-based programs that can be used to improve the life outcomes of a greater number of children. I just love seeing the Institute succeed and knowing they have the capacity to continue to do so for many years.”

Congratulations and many thanks to Dan Draper for his work at Children’s Institute.

Helping children adjust to family transitions

Picture a young child who watches as her mom or dad goes away one day, knowing that s/he will be gone for a long time. The child knows that her parent is working to keep us safe. Her parent is in the military and is being deployed. Children may not always understand why they are going, just that it is going to be a long time and they are often sad and sometimes afraid. This scene repeats itself in communities around the country and often these service members are members of the National Guard or a reservist. Research has found that children of these service members feel more loneliness and disengagement than those of active duty who often live near a military installation. What they are experiencing and feeling is “invisible” to teachers and after-school providers unless the family or child shares this information. Based on census data, we estimate that there are approximately 2,600 children in the greater Rochester area who have a parent or sibling who is currently a member of the military.

Children’s Institute knows that disruptions to family life and fear for their family member’s safety affect a child’s ability to learn and attend to the daily requirements of school. Through play, children can express their feelings about their family and transitions such as a military deployment or other changes at home. Thanks to funding from the American Legion, ESL, and Tompkins Charitable Trust, Children’s Institute has distributed the “Possibilities of Play: Building Connections” DVD to schools, veteran’s organizations, and Boys and Girls Clubs around the country - along with local workshops for school mental health professionals. The DVD explores both the joyful and serious sides of play and why play is so important to the healthy development of children.

Children’s Institute website a finalist for “Best of the Web” Award

Last year, Children’s Institute recognized that our website needed to be upgraded to add more online functions that are considered vital for growth with today’s technology. At the same time, we also made the decision to bring the website design function back in-house. Jonathan Richwalder, Systems Administrator, and Mary Maiolo, Senior Graphics Coordinator, began work and implemented online donations, product ordering, and training registrations – all functions previously completed manually by staff. Each update went smoothly and was quickly accepted by our customers and donors.

We submitted a nomination for a “Best of the Web” and were selected as a nominee for the Digital Rochester’s Business Transformation Award. Per the Rochester Business Journal criteria, this award is given to a Rochester-area firm that has transformed its business through the Web. Past finalists and winners have demonstrated business success gained by using the Web for strategic growth, harnessing cutting edge technology in website launches, mastering unique Web functionality, or by making a significant impact on their organization through the exploration of online technologies. Other finalists in this category included Draft Sharks (draftsharks.com), JMS Capital Management Inc. (jms-cm.com), and Roberts Wesleyan College (roberts.edu)
